Inconsistency is the most common social media mistake. Businesses post daily for two weeks, run out of ideas, go quiet for a month, then repeat. This guide gives you a repeatable system for planning 30 days of content in one sitting so you never face a blank posting day again.

01 Build Your Content Pillars

Content pillars are the 3 to 4 core topics you will consistently talk about. They should reflect your expertise, your audience's interests, and your business goals. Everything you post fits into one of these pillars.

How to choose your pillars

Ask yourself: what does my ideal customer need to know? What do I know better than most people? What topics would make my audience trust me more? What topics lead naturally to my services?

Example pillars by business type

Design agency: design tips, client results, behind the scenes, business growth. Restaurant: recipes and food stories, sourcing and suppliers, team and culture, customer moments. Consultant: industry insights, case studies, process and method, client transformations.

The education-entertainment-promotion ratio

Aim for 60% education and value, 20% entertainment and personality, 20% promotion and offers. Audiences tolerate promotion when it is surrounded by genuine value.

ACTION CHECKLIST

- [] 3 to 4 content pillars defined and written down
- [] Example post ideas listed under each pillar
- [] Education, entertainment, promotion ratio planned

Tip: Test your pillars for one month. At the end, check which pillar generated the most engagement and which generated the most enquiries. They are often different and both matter.

02 Choose Your Posting Frequency

Consistency beats frequency every time. Three posts per week done reliably for 6 months builds more audience than daily posting for 3 weeks followed by silence. Choose a schedule you can maintain when you are busy, not just when you are motivated.

Recommended frequencies by platform

Instagram: 3 to 5 posts per week plus daily stories. LinkedIn: 3 to 4 posts per week. Twitter X: 1 to 3 posts per day. TikTok: 3 to 5 videos per week. Facebook: 3 to 4 posts per week.

The minimum viable posting schedule

If you can only do one thing consistently, post 3 times per week on your primary platform. That is 156 posts per year. At 156 posts you will have learned more about your audience than any course can teach you.

Batch content creation

Set aside 2 to 3 hours once per week to create all content for the following week. Do not try to think of what to post on the day. Content created under time pressure is always worse.

ACTION CHECKLIST

- ☐ Primary platform chosen
- ☐ Weekly posting frequency decided
- ☐ Content creation day and time blocked in calendar

Tip: The goal of your first month is not great content. It is finding out what your audience responds to. Post, observe, adjust. Repeat.

03 The 30-Day Content Calendar Structure

Use this structure to fill your calendar for the month. Rotate your pillars so you are not posting the same type of content back to back. Mix formats: text posts, carousels, videos, behind the scenes, and questions.

Week 1: Establish and educate

Monday: educational post from pillar 1. Wednesday: tip or how-to from pillar 2. Friday: behind the scenes or team post.

Week 2: Build trust and connection

Monday: client result or testimonial. Wednesday: your opinion on an industry topic. Friday: question to your audience or poll.

Week 3: Show your process

Monday: how you work or how your process looks. Wednesday: educational post from pillar 3. Friday: a mistake you made and what you learned.

Week 4: Convert and offer

Monday: your service or product explained. Wednesday: a client transformation story. Friday: call to action with offer or booking link.

ACTION CHECKLIST

- ☐ 30-day calendar drafted with post type for each day
- ☐ Variety of formats planned across the month
- ☐ At least one CTA post planned per week

Tip: Planning the post type is more important than writing the caption in advance. Knowing that Wednesday is always an educational post removes the creative decision and saves significant mental energy.

04 Content Formats That Perform

The same information in different formats reaches different people. A tip that performs well as a text post might perform even better as a carousel or a short video. Test formats consistently.

Carousels

Multi-slide posts get the highest reach on Instagram and LinkedIn because people swipe through them, which signals engagement to the algorithm. Use them for step-by-step guides, comparisons, and lists.

Short form video

Reels, TikToks, and YouTube Shorts get the highest organic reach of any format right now. You do not need a camera crew. A phone, good lighting, and a clear point are enough.

Text posts with a strong opening line

On LinkedIn and Twitter X, text posts with a powerful first line that makes people click more outperform all other formats. The first line must create curiosity or state a strong opinion.

Stories and ephemeral content

Stories are your most personal format. Use them for day-to-day updates, polls, questions, and behind-the-scenes content that does not need to be polished.

ACTION CHECKLIST

- ☐ At least 3 different formats planned for the month
- ☐ Video content scheduled at least once per week
- ☐ Story content planned separately from feed content

Tip: Repurpose aggressively. One idea can become a LinkedIn text post, an Instagram carousel, a TikTok video, a WhatsApp broadcast, and a section of a newsletter. Create once and distribute everywhere.
